History of Patna Satta King

The Satta King, originating in pre-independence India from the concept of betting on the transmitted prices of cotton from New York Cotton Exchange to Bombay, gradually developed into a game of numbers-based lottery wherein players place their bets on digits rather than commodities. Patna Satta King is the current game, a locally dominant form, which tempts participants to try their luck with this reimagined yet traditional gambling activity.

Players select numbers and, for every day of play, a number is randomly picked. Those winning receive a prize; the prize might be indicative of the pool and individual stakes. The easy game of Patna Satta King—betting on a number and then waiting patiently for the results—is enticing to those individuals looking for something easy and exciting to gamble on.
